CAUTION: BEWARE OF THESE HIDDEN HAZARDS

1/ FLIP-FLOPPING AROUND

For the same reasons you love flip-flops (they're easy to slip into and feel like nothing on your feet), doctors urge you to be wary. According to research recently published in the Journal of the American Podiatric Medical Association (APMA), these flimsy sandals can alter your gait, leading to ankle sprains and foot problems like plantar fasciitis, an inflammation of the tissue connecting the heel bone to the toes. You also risk ending up with permanently wider feet, since the shoes can cause soles to splay out and loosen your ligaments over time, says APMA spokeswoman Megan Leahy, D.P.M., a Chicago-based podiatrist. So wear flip-flops in moderation (up to one hour of cumulative walking per day), and spend the rest of your time in more structured footwear.

wheel on the drive home. A study from North Carolina State University found that fatal traffic accidents following college and professional sporting events are more frequent after a close score than when the game was a blowout. Researchers blame a spike in testosterone levels, which is linked to aggression, says study author Stacy Wood, Ph.D. If your guy won't fork over the car keys, she suggests buying him a soft drink and making him chill with it before leaving the stadium. Not only will that give him some time to calm down, but the sugar should help lower his testosterone levels. And if you're the one who's ultra-competitive? Be prepared to let someone else drive.

3/ FALLING FOR LETTUCE LIES

Salad is a summer staple, but don't assume you can save time by buying the "prewashed" variety. Studies have found fecal contaminants and other bacteria in bagged lettuce—even those labeled "triple-washed"—so it's smart to rinse before you eat. It also helps to clean your hands well

2/ HANGING WITH A SUPERFAN

Next time your boyfriend's favorite baseball team wins in a down-to-the-wire game, make sure you take the

with soap and water before handling the leaves, and to choose packages with the latest possible "sell by" date. "The closer to the expiration, the more filth we found," says Urvashi Rangan, Ph.D., director of consumer safety at Consumer Reports.

4/ HOLDING IT

Yes, Porta Pottis are gross, and the lines for them are generally long. But going thirsty to avoid a bathroom break could make your time at an outdoor concert or festival even more unpleasant. On a sweltering day, you can become dehydrated and develop heat exhaustion—characterized by excessive sweating, weakness, dizziness, and nausea. So keep sipping water regularly. A sports drink is also a good pick because it contains electrolytes, like sodium, that you lose when you sweat, says Laura C. Knobel, M.D., a family physician in Walpole, MA. Nibbling on juicy fruit (like watermelon) works too, especially if you pair it with a salty snack (like pretzels or popcorn) to help your body retain fluid. Just avoid diuretics, such as alcohol and caffeine. And when you get the urge to go, don't fight it. Grab some hand sanitizer and tissues, and fearlessly open that plastic door.

5/ SWIMMING WHILE INTOXICATED

Tiki bars and beer coolers seem to abound this time of year, but sipping and dipping can be a dangerous mix. Alcohol is involved in nearly half of all water recreation-related fatalities, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). Not only are imbibers more likely to drown, but they're also at greater risk for injuries like broken limbs, cuts, and scrapes, explains Tess Benham, a spokesperson for the National Safety Council. If you plan to dive into the pool or ocean, stick with H₂O or virgin cocktails.

TIP→ Save the booze for happy hour on dry land.
